

Ed-Co Alumni
Glen Mormann - Class of 2003
Written by Addy Kirby

The sounds of cows fill the barn as Ed-Co graduate of the class of 2003, Glen Mormann walks through. Following graduation Glen attended Kirkwood college for agronomy. "I first started in the agronomy field which helped me learn about major input of a crop. When I came back to dairy I had a good feel about the crop side of the farm. The dairy side was way more complex. Since I have been back on the farm working around the best people I would say is how I am where I am today. With that there is a long list of employees, nutritionists, agronomists, embryologists, custom harvesters, peer groups, flexible family, and great parents," stated Glen. Still, when reminiscing about his invaluable high school experience at Ed-Co, he said the best thing about Ed-Co is the small class sizes, because he was able to socialize with his class as well as those above and below him. Glen now resides in New Vienna with his wife Mikha, and three boys Max, Miles, and Mclane. His family made him stay close to home. Advice Glen would give to current high schoolers and graduates is "it's not easy, but you need to always look forward and learn from mistakes, that is how you can make a great future for yourself!" Once a Viking, always a Viking!
