Josh Loeffelholz graduated in the class of 1999. Following graduation Josh attended Iowa State University. Josh resides in Waukee, Iowa with his family and is a Talent Development Officer at Wells Fargo. When asked how he got where he is today, Josh replied, “Long story, and love to tell it. From poor farm kid to class President. From ISU freshman barely hanging on to the Dean’s list multiple semesters. From college graduate to high school teacher in the largest district in Iowa. From a teacher to a corporate America employee. From individual contributor in a cube to leading talent functionality for a large financial line of business. Oh, while raising 3 kids, having side projects and volunteering in the community. How did I get there? Hard work, confidence, being a good human and some good old fashioned luck got me where I am today.” Josh loved everything about his time at Ed-Co starting with teachers, friends, football, and the community. His advice is, “Do not worry about finding the perfect job - it does not exist. Instead find a role that fits your current skills and that you can learn from. You don’t know what you don’t know, so keep learning and growing.” Josh has built himself from the ground up and is chasing his dreams. He is a Viking at heart!
